

Barbara Humpton

Barbara Humpton is Vice President of Security and Citizen Protection for Lockheed Martin Corporation. Ms. Humpton has portfolio and business area responsibility for the Department of Justice, Department of Homeland Security and the Department of State. She is responsible for critical programs including FBI Sentinel, Next Generation Identification, TSA Special Security Training, and Transportation Worker Identification Card. Prior to assuming her current position, Ms. Humpton served as Vice President of Secure Enterprise Solutions. She also served as Project Director for the FBI's Next Generation Identification Program, awarded to Lockheed Martin in February, 2008. As Project Director, Ms. Humpton was responsible for the successful proposal and program start-up.

Ms. Humpton has more than 20 years of leadership, program management and capture experience in software development and systems integration programs. She served as the program director for the customs modernization program and managed the software architecture evolution of the Global Positioning System. She has also done extensive work in company-wide initiatives in areas including homeland security coordination, software capability evaluation and human resource management.

In 2007, Ms. Humpton earned the Project Management Professional credential from the Project Management Institute. Within Lockheed Martin, she has achieved both a Certified Program Manager and Qualified Capture Manager professional status. She holds a Bachelor of Science degree in mathematics from Wake Forest University.